Innovation in Child Family Services: Research and Development of Practice Models and Manuals

ABSTRACT

Due to the recent changes in socio-economic environments and the on-going social welfare reform, recently the raison d'être of the child family services (CFS) profession has been questioned. The roles of the CFS profession are to be taken over by other professions or by private for-profit organizations unless they commit themselves to research and development of practice models and manuals, which has never been given appropriate attention by the profession. In this paper, the fact that innovation in CFS could be accomplished only by the R&D reinforced by TQM of CFS organizations was examined. The procedures to implement the R&D of practice models and manuals were also discussed.
